YOU LOVE ART EVEN IF YOU DON’T KNOW

_Find out why art history features you._

_It is more than likely that you are one of those people who think that classical art is as beautiful as it is boring. As for contemporary art, we might as well not even talk about it. All of it seems to have been kidnapped by an elite you don’t identify with._

_But the truth is that the history of art has to do way more with your life and tribulations than you might think, and it answers many of the whys and wherefores of history, both past and present. Sometimes art is refined and exquisite, and sets out to follow New Year’s resolutions as much as we do; but some other times it explores new paths and blows up every rule we seem to know. Let’s take graffiti, for instance, did you know that they have existed since the time of the Egyptians?! Sara Rubayo is a well-known art promoter and educator. In her new essay _You Love Art Even If You Don’t Know_ she challenges us with an exciting vision of the history of the art that we never knew about. In it, you might come to realise that despite not even knowing it yet, you do love art because its history is your history._

THE WOMEN BEHIND PICASSO

The Women Behind Picasso focuses on the leading women featuring both the life and work of the famous painter. Olga Khokhlova, Dora Maar, Françoise Gilot or Jacqueline Roque are just some of the protagonists that inspired the life and art of the Malaga born painter, helped him promote his work and looked after throughout all stages of his life.

How much do we know about him and how much about them? They were all women of outstanding talent who had to overcome countless obstacles and defend themselves from the abuse they got from both the artist and the environment in which they lived, and who, years later, would be subjected to the nuances of a historiography that would deal with their figures in a gender biased way. This book is an effort to unveil the biographies of those women who would become critical to turn Pablo into Picasso, women whose existence bloomed despite the painter rather than thanks to him.

Eugenia Tenenbaum, an Art Historian and expert in Gender Studies, reveals the profiles of each of the unique protagonists. Using different genres and literary devices, Tenenbaum re-enacts different stages of the lives of this bunch of breath-taking women to bring them back to the pinnacle in art history—a place where they belong and where they should have always been.

Eugenia Tenenbaum is an Art Historian. A Galician living in Madrid, she has become one of the top digital art influencers in Spain thanks to the impact of her social networks and Patreon. Her area of expertise revolves around Gender Studies applied to Fine Arts. Last year she published the essay The Adventurous Gaze. The Women Behind Picasso is her first work of fiction.

DEAD OF ADONAIS

The last days of John Keats, Percy Bysshe Shelley and Lord Byron encountered their dead’s between the winter of 1821 and the spring of 1824, putting an end to the second and last generation of English Romanticism.

They ran away from their conservative, native England, and devoted their lives to the pursuit of Beauty and Death.

They eventually found their sublime ideal in a land of sea and mystery, Italy, where they understood that the triumph of poetry could only be achieved through Death. Therefore, none of them made it to their 40th birthday. All three aspired to love and literary glory, but their sinister past seemed to haunt them until the end of their misfortune.

Professor Fernando Valverde has devised a thrilling story that invites us to share the last years of his three legendary protagonists, a story filled with trepidation, sleeplessness and emotion. The result is an outstanding and exquisite creative non-fiction book, and a moving tribute to love, poetry and literature.

Fernando Valverde is one of the most awarded and distinguished young poets in Spain, and has been named the most relevant poet in Spanish language born after 1970 according to a panel of two hundred poetry critics from over a hundred different universities (including Harvard, Oxford, Columbia or Princeton). He is a Professor of Poetry at the university of Virginia in the United States.

An outstanding tribute to love and poetry. A work that vindicates the women who helped Pablo turning into Picasso.

This Book Will Make You Live Longer (or at Least Better)

Choose good habits, adapt your routines and improve your wellbeing

The gathering of scientific data and further knowledge has lengthened our life expectancy, mostly in developed countries. However, this wellbeing culture has not managed to pervade the population to add quality of life to this increased longevity. As it turns out, we are constantly harassed by a digital culture endorsing a sedentary lifestyle and chronic stress. To make things worse, the surging sales of miraculous and instantly curative products are intensifying the individual pressure and sense of guilt of those who lack the time or the aim to invest in their wellbeing. The good news is that we don’t need “easy and fast” methods or miracles of any sort to live longer (or, at least, to live better.)

Tamara Pazos, a Biologist Specialising in Neuroscience and educator, has spent years researching how to use popular science to prevent health risks. In her new book she displays a detailed and scientifically proven guide that elucidates which are the five major fields of action that will allow us to improve our health: our natural environment, sleeping patterns, sense of awareness, physical exercise and diet.

Inflammation: Be Aware
A guide to fight chronic inflammation and strengthen your immune system

The immune system is in charge of controlling chronic inflammation, and it is behind many conditions in modern life, including those days in which you are feeling unwell without knowing why. To admit that we might be suffering from chronic inflammation, and knowing how to fight it with a proper diet and an anti-inflammatory lifestyle, can remarkably help us to improve our quality of life.

In this book, Dr. Gabriela Pocovi, a top researcher on the impact that our dietary habits have in our immune system, will show you how to take critical steps to strengthen it, tackle inflammation and get back on your healthy feet. The starting point is to take care of your bowels and its microbiota.

What does inflammation have to do with the immune system? What does the immune system have to do with hormones? And what role does microbiota play in all this? As it turns out, everything inside our bodies is deeply connected. Low-grade chronic inflammation (LGCI) is largely behind many of the diseases and conditions of modern life. It is the breeding ground of chronic illnesses, a permanent disorder that we all fear, and that more than often makes its gradual way to wreak havoc like a quiet, unnoticed enemy.

Allergies, the new epidemic
A guide to understand, prevent and fight allergies

There are allergies all year round and in every season. They affect people of all ages and occur everywhere. For some time now, sneezing, itching or bloodshot eyes have become part of our lives and every year more and more people are suffering from them. But what are the causes of this spike? And why does one in four people suffer from this pathology? Allergies are deemed the latest non-infectious epidemic of our times. There are a lot of urban myths and ignorance around them, and many people believe that allergies are curable, while others tend to mix them up with intolerance.

In her latest essay, Dr. Paula Ribó summons all the knowledge she has gathered throughout her training, research and medical practice, and dismantles these false beliefs. Ribó breaks down when and why allergic reactions appear, and which are the most common symptoms according to their typology, discloses the most frequent causes that can trigger a serious reaction, and explains how to proceed in the event of anaphylaxis or anaphylactic shock.

Dr. Ribó and her clever advice will make living with allergies much easier.

Paula Ribó is an allergist, researcher and popular scientist. She holds a Degree in Medicine from the Universitat Rovira i Virgili and a PhD in Medicine from the Universitat of Barcelona, and has her own allergist practice since 2020. She is a member of the researching team Recerca Immunoal·lèrgica Respiratòria Clínica i Experimental (IRCE) and the Sociedad Catalana d’Al·lèrgia i Immunologia Clínica (SCAIC), amongst others.

Gabriela Pocovi holds a PhD in Medicine and Public Health from the university of Granada, and a nutritionist-dietician Degree from the central university of Venezuela. She is an enthusiast researcher of the human body and mind, holds also a Master’s Degree in cellular and molecular Immunology from the university of Granada, and several courses and diplomas in holistic and integrative health, coaching and personal growth. She has been working for over a decade as an immune-nutritionist, holistic healer and life coach of people suffering from digestive, hormonal and autoimmune health issues. She also devotes much of her time to research and lecturing.
Rubble, ashes and bones; these are the remains that we usually encounter upon exploring an ancient battlefield or the ruins of a village, a devastated land concealing thousands of stories, from the last breath of a fallen soldier to the stifled screaming of a family ravaged by the war. Ever so often, the swift unfolding of events that form our notion of history has numbed our perception of these shocking realities, cutting us off from the narrative of violence and suffering that encompasses them and rarely moves us.

We tend to forget that, lying underneath the destruction and brutality of warfare, there are people, their memories and hopes quietened by the edge of a sword; recurrent human narratives that turn history into something pulsating and tangible.

Using archaeology as a narrative device, Alfredo González Rubial helps us sharpen our hearing, listening to their whispers and unfolding their ruthless tales of violence and abuse, bringing us closer to a reality devoid of the shading tinges of war and ideology. And these are precisely the last vestiges that speak most eloquently about our nature and its disturbing, destructive tendencies.

ANTI MARX

_A critique to Marxist political economy_

Juan Ramón Rallo’s essay stands out among the exceedingly abundant literature existing on Marx, for two reasons. First, there is no other work simultaneously offering an extensive and detailed review of Marx’s thinking and a thorough demolition of it. Secondly, this is the first comprehensive critique to Marxist economic theory displayed in such a meticulous and orderly way. In its first volume, Rallo introduces us to Marxist ideology and thinking, emphasising its economic aspect (although not exclusively) in a systematic and aseptic manner: it is not intended to distort or caricature Marx, but simply to explain, in the most accessible way, his ideas and line of thought.

With that purpose in mind, Rallo revises, breaks down and integrates Marx’s extensive work. Through the joint analysis of all his literature, supported by the study of the works of Engels and other outstanding Marxist intellectuals, Rallo manages to expose in a coherent way Marx’s theories on value, money, capital, exploitation, prices, wages, profits, social classes, economic growth, economic crises and the advent of communism. It will be in the second volume when Rallo will expose the issues and misconceptions of all these theories.

JUAN RAMÓN RALLO

_An introduction to Marx’s economic ideology._

Juan Ramón Rallo sets out to the titanic task of both reconstructing and deconstructing Karl Marx’s economic thinking. It is the most ambitious critique of Marxism written to date.

Mum, I’m Trans
A guide for households with gender-conflicted teenagers

Using an accessible language for the general public, and filled with case studies and specific examples, Mum, I’m Trans is a guide for families whose children come out as transgender that explains what is the correct course of action to follow when this happens.

If you are concerned about the cultural transmission of transgender identity amongst teenagers, this book provides you with the appropriate background to communicate with the adolescent, and teaches you how to track down the origin of the issue, how to understand the way they feel and what is the meaning of such conflicts in today’s life.

A more accurate diagnose of the trans issue can only be possible if we immerse ourselves in the social networks that the adolescent has been consuming for dozens of hours a week since childhood, if we get to know how the messages aired through media outlets and their school environment affect them, and if we ultimately understand the proportions of the industry and business that lays behind all these issues.

What to do when a gender identity issue involving a teenager comes up in a family?

To Educate with Mental Health
What your kids need and only you can provide

In this book, doctor María Velasco, a child and teenage psychiatrist, provides us with a guide that would help us navigate the challenging and fascinating task of becoming parents. In the process, Velasco will answer a number of critical questions: What is motherhood? And what is fatherhood? What is childhood? And upbringing? Which emotional needs do our kids have? How to build a proper sense of belonging? Which are the emotional conflicts triggered by motherhood and fatherhood? Which are the main challenges that parents are dealing with nowadays? How can we support our children to become mentally balanced and resilient adults? Is it possible to provide a serene upbringing?

This is a clear guide full of hope that will teach today’s parents how to merge their lives and their kids’ upbringing, how to master parenting, incorporate it and learn to look after their most precious gift: the unconditional love of their children.

How to accompany you kids in their childhood, to make sure they will grow up happy and fulfilled

Learning How to Look after Your Inner Child

Heal, protect and look after your inner child in order to reach a fully functional adulthood

Jordi Gil Martin delivers his method to heal the dormant wounds of childhood that continue affecting us during our adult life. There is a common understanding of the critical role that our first years of life play in our adulthood. How we are, what we think and feel, and how we act is largely determined by our crucial first years, hence the significance of conducting a work of introspection and awareness destined to address the wounds we carry within.

Jordi Gil offers his expertise to become a guide of what he calls our “mission in life.” In his long experience as a therapist, Gil has been tracking how the happiness of adults is often conditioned by the side effects inflicted by our childhood wounds.

Throughout this essay we will find out the importance of healing, protecting, sheltering and looking after our inner child. It is necessary to reconnect with the magic of our early years and inhabit a place of inner strength. If we pay the necessary attention to our childhood wounds we can manage to put an end to the chronic damage that hinders us, bogs us down and stops our way to happiness.

Learning to Meditate

The practice of Effective Awareness available for everybody

Have you ever tried to meditate? Maybe close your eyes and try to “blank your mind.” According to Sesha, our mind resembles a helium balloon. It is not that the balloon flies blown by the wind in any possible direction, but because it is tied to your hand with a thin string. Unfortunately, we do let go of that thin string that controls our mind many times a day, plunging it into distraction and absent-mindedness. Some studies estimate that, on average, a person remains distracted 74 per cent of their conscious time. This book will teach you how to get to know and tame your awareness, until eventually you will realise the moment when you are letting the string go.

In order to survive as individuals, we have developed multiple habits that help us subsist daily; but paradoxically keep us away from happiness. Having the strength to change those habits for more stable ones; or even more stable habits for deeper certainties, is not easy. That is precisely the reason why the ancient scholars of the mind came up with a number of strategies to develop Effective Awareness, until achieving their own personal realisation. Thus, the culmination of this process is called Meditation.
In this book we will discover the creating power of words in its broader and most spiritual sense.

Discovering your Abracadabra

The art of creating life through the power of words

If we believe that life is our own creation we should start being aware of the words we use, the words we don’t mention and the words that we tell to others, since we use them to build the reality we perceive.

This reading is based on the power of words, thoughts and actions. Is there a greater power than that of a person that has managed to be aligned in all these manifestations of life? In the following pages you will get familiar with meanings, etymologies and revelations of the most relevant words in the world we live in: challenge, crisis, magic, discovery, art, honesty, revelation, awareness. The truth is that once we know the truly deep meaning of words, we can open doors that were probably slammed with screams, threats or punishments during our childhood; words that are still living there, untouched; words that we can come back to whenever the time comes.

The magic of creating through words, until elevating the vibration of our existence, and reaching a more powerful life.

EDUARDO INFANTE

A plea for classical virtue and against the immorality of today’s influencers.

Achilles in Tik Tok

The path to virtue

Achilles in Tik Tok questions the feverish productivity and sense of urgency imposed by the Capitalist system, claiming that contentment only comes to those who focus on what is relevant; that is, the pursuit of happiness and a life based on virtue.

While searching what teachings could be more useful to help today’s youngsters to face their complex tomorrow, we often forget the importance of knowledge that has no practical consequences. Philosophical education demands an effort that doesn’t seem to be worth it in a world obsessed with instant satisfaction. Influencers are replacing the classical authors who have guided humanity for thousands of years as we speak. However, ancient texts have a transformative power for human virtue that can hardly be replaced by the icons of social networks.

Eduardo Infante turns to the greatest philosophers of Classical Greece, the likes of Socrates, Plato, Homer to Aristotle, to underscore the importance of virtue, a quality that we must preserve in order to live our lives to its fullest meaning.

Edna Sandoval has inspired thousands of readers thanks to her books. She is on her own self-discovery journey for the last fifteen years, at least, through paths, travels and research on spiritual knowledge. She accompanies people to discover their true essence. She has been capable to crystallise her experience in powerful works of literature that have reached all sort of readers. In her books, Sandoval addresses an audience eager to make this world a better place through everyday acts.

Eduardo Infante is a philosopher and author of the international best seller Philosophy on the Street. He teaches philosophy using unconventional methods: he tells the story of Socrates death from a courtroom, explains Aristotle while walking through the park, invites to engage with cynicism while walking commercial streets and challenges us with his #FiloRetos on social networks, where he invites us “to think life and live thought.”
We know that relationships come without guarantees. But we also know that some people get hooked, that they develop toxic bonds with each other and that, before they know it, they begin losing control of their own lives. Those who suffer from emotional dependency hold a misconception of what love is, they normalise suffering and develop a terrible and irrational panic at the idea of losing their partner. They distant themselves from their true essence, lose their vitality, their illusions melt and their entire existence revolves around someone they are not even happy with.

Silvia Congost, a renowned psychologist both in Spain and Latin America, explores and analyses all the nuances of emotional dependence, in order for you to understand it, identify it, and most importantly, to get rid of it.

This manual will guide you, with a clear and warm style, to find your inner strength, the one and only power that will free yourself from this burden, and to start making your way towards what you truly deserve.

José Carlos Ruiz is professor at the Universidad de Córdoba, he received his degree in philosophy and a doctorate in Contemporary Philosophy. He has specialized in critical thinking and its application in different educational processes. His research focuses on the philosophy of culture, the analysis of hypermodern society and the approach of philosophy to the everyday. He is the author of Philosophy to Face Discouragement, among other titles.

Silvia Congost is a psychologist specializing in self-esteem and emotional dependency. She now works as a psychologist and leads self-esteem and personal growth groups. Her success derives from her ability to provoke the changes a person needs in less than ten sessions. All of her clients attest to her effectiveness, as do numerous testimonials.
How can we nurse psychological discomfort? When we are stuck in a state of angst, panic or anxiety and we have the courage to find calmness, undo the fear and deal with compulsive states that prevent us from moving forward.

Throughout this book, we will initially tackle fear itself, or rather, fears in general. Will explore some curious facts related to fear, and then we will explore the origin of seemingly incomprehensible fears, fears that ambush us randomly or that travel with us permanently.

After that, we will tackle safety, the true antidote to fear, and an essential concept to understand it: our sense of belonging.

Throughout the book, we will deal with fear itself, or rather with fears. We will delve into safety as the true solution to fight them, and we will dive into one of the key ground of that safety: our sense of belonging, and how it affects us to have had or not having had a source of attachment during our childhood.

The prestigious psychiatrist Anabel Gonzalez provides us with an extremely useful guide to find calmness, undo the fear and learn to deal with compulsive mental states that might prevent us from moving forward.

The renowned psychologist Tomás Navarro provides us with the necessary tools of emotional self-defence to draw those red lines that no one should cross.

Throughout his essay, Tomás Navarro provides us with a quintessential step-by-step guide to unlearn everything that prevents us from establishing clear priorities. Using a simple language and the most relatable common sense, Navarro explores the fundamental foundations for setting our boundaries, elaborating on how self-esteem and self-respect work, elucidating the relevance of self-care and why we need to protect and defend ourselves emotionally, and, most importantly, what is the essence of assertiveness.

Using simple explanations based on psychology, and tackling case reports and exercises, Navarro’s essay also introduces us with a simple three-step method to draw our red lines, a method that can be applied to love, work and family, as well as strategies to help us dealing with emotional blackmail and our sense of guilt.

The Chemistry of Beauty

Deborah García Bello gifts us with a work that reflects on beauty, and unveils how to experience it to its fullest, greater intensity by using scientific knowledge.

The author invites us to a walk through everyday beauty, where we will find out how art, the beauty of a sunset or natural phenomena and chemistry are closely related.

The squawking of seagulls, the light pink skies that anticipate a day of sunshine, the smell of old books, the black and white photographs of our grandparents, the sea, the bloom of the turnip tops, my mum applying her lipsticked, the fashion magazines of the 1960s, my neighbourhood, the urban flowers, the smell of tyres, a necklace of lapis lazuli or a school desk with names engraved in it. Thanks to chemistry I have kept at awe my amusement for everyday beauty, and I have learnt to savour quietly the splendour of precious things, from the happiness of a normal day to the fascination for a piece of art. Knowing your chemistry is like walking through life with atomic scale eyes. All the beauty, the goodness and the truly incomparable things of daily life look clearer through scientific knowledge.

Deborah García Bello studied chemistry at the University of A Coruña, where she is pursuing a doctorate focusing on the popularization of science and the relation between science and contemporary art. As a cultural figure, she writes for different media such as El País, El observador de la belleza, and Naukas, and lectures all over the world.

Meteorsensitive

If weather changes alter your mood; if winter saddens you, or your knees become your secret whistle-blowers announcing the upcoming rain, then it is highly likely that you are meteorsensitive.

We take for granted that storms depress us, that spring fever exists, that winds madden us, and that the moon affects women’s menstrual cycle. But, what is the truth behind all that? And more importantly, which other environmental factors or meteorological upheavals can alter our physical and mental health?

When Mar Gómez, a Physicist and meteorologist moved to southwest Madrid, she could tell how her body was reacting to the drier weather and the local gusty winds. Driven by her scientific curiosity, she immersed herself in the study of meteorsensitivity, a rather unknown discipline, but one that offers mind-blowing answers to understand the effects that atmospheric changes have on our bodies. And, most importantly, how the current advance of climate change will end up affecting not only the planet, but also all of us.

Atmospheric pressure, wind, high temperatures, pollution, solar radiation, altitude or the effect of the moon are some of the aspects that I have dug with the main intention of demolishing myths and finding answers in the only place where I have encountered the truth since I was a little girl: science.

Mar Gómez holds a Cum Laude PhD and Degree in Physical Science from the Complutense university of Madrid, where she specialised in Physics of the Atmosphere. Currently, she is the head of the meteorology section of eltiempo.es and has contributed to a number of media outlets. Among her most outstanding talks, it is worth mentioning the one she gave during the International summit on Climate, Change The Change, the United Nations summit on Climate Change (COP25), and her involvement in the United Nations program to protect the Arctic.

• The first gazpacho recipe ever was published in Mexico? Or that the first paella recipe to be printed was in French? As for stew, guess what, there was no recipe printed until the 20th century.
• If pizza is today a global, massively consumed food, it is thanks to the battle of Monte Cassino during the Second World War.
• Regarding the word restaurant, the Bible is accountable for its first mention.

Throughout our existence humans have fought a battle, often to death, against bacteria. These tiny microorganisms cause maladies as infamously famous as plague or cholera, but also as common as tooth cavities.

And now that it looked that we were leading the race against them thanks to antibiotics, its misuse and erratic dosage plus other factors have triggered the emergence of the so-called superbugs. The resistance of some of them has already become a threat to our lifestyle, and it might be a matter of barely thirty years before they become the main cause of worldwide deaths, even ahead of cancer.

Andrea Muras Mora, a scientist and educator, tackles and enlightens us about all the above, and explains what superbugs are, how they deflect and evade drugs, why they multiply and what is the scientific community working on to prevent their advance.

This is without a doubt, a fascinating book where the most complex knowledge is explained in a humble way, using a close and amusing voice that will feed your hunger for reading while you also learn something that affects you directly.

Andrea Muras holds a PhD in Microbiology and alternates her work as a researcher with her role as an educator. Muras has also a Degree in Biology, a Masters Degree in Biotechnology and another one in Scientific Culture. Along her working career, her work has been focused on breaking down the behaviour of bacteria in order to prevent infections and the subsequent emergence of super resistant microbes.

ALL DEATHS

The end of life: from Oceans to robots

There is not just a single definition of death, not just a single interpretation, but there is a leit-motif based on our scientific understanding of a mortal reality. Arguably there is not just a single death in the course of one’s life, but many of them.

Ricard Solé, a physicist, biologist and researcher for the Catalan Institution for Research and Advanced Studies (ICREA in Catalan) delivers his take on all these extinctions: from the thermal death of the universe and the inanimate systems, until cities and civilizations, oceans or robots, and also the demise of our bodies and minds.

To write and reflect on the end of life allows us to improve our understanding of the nature of this inescapable and most common reality that has shaped our culture and moulded our fears since the birth of consciousness —and our permanent need of imagining the future.

Gathering the legacy of those who have used literature, cinema, theatre, philosophy or science to write about bereavement, All Deaths focuses on a scientific, critical and open approach to rethink the several scenarios in which we can address death in strictly rigorous terms.

Do you believe that the distance from your dreams is a matter of luck? That just spoiled, random fate decides who makes their dreams come true and who doesn’t?

There are only two conditions for you to achieve your goals: to have the necessary knowledge and putting it into practice.

This essay explains in a plain and accessible way the universal laws of The Kybalion, the commanding principles of the Huns philosophy, how does your mind work so that you can successfully formulate your wishes, the importance of beliefs, the value of the word, the power of faith, attainable and powerful techniques like the Ho’oponopono and the Spirit of Aloha, and the irresistible power of love.

Pagan Oracle

There was a time when popular beliefs, no matter how different they were, shared common myths, had similar goddesses and gods, symbols and archetypes. The oracle takes you to those origins, reviving the pagan certainties existing for many centuries in Europe.

In Pagan Oracle, Aitor retrieves the roots of European mysticism, amalgamates myths and nature, and merges it with the spiritual, invisible world. Aitor summons his intimate, precious, spirituality and evocative work ethos, and displays for us the cards, their inherent relationship with nature and its elements: earth, air, water and fire, and merges it with the gods, the lunar cycle, significant objects, plants, symbols... Magical, harmonised and respectful of the esoteric world.

In each of the forty cards you will find a poetic inner gear, where symbols and archetypes will provide you with a puzzle of different answers depending on the questions you make to the oracle. Delve into it, soak up its wisdom and let yourself be guided by its messages.

Family Constellations

Family constellations help us to understand and heal our relationships and other emotional aspects, getting in touch with our inner self in order to allow us to see every situation from an entirely different perspective.

This guide includes a deck of cards featuring the characters of the transformation, allowing you to perform your own family constellations (either alone or with family and friends), find out the reason behind your negative reactions and learn how to leave behind the characters that we assume in critical moments.

You have in your hands a very effective tool to manage your unconscious through the game, its metaphors and archetypes.
